Irvine Analytical Laboratories expands, announces name change

IRVINE, CA – Irvine Analytical Laboratories, Inc. today announced the company will change its name to Irvine Pharmaceutical Services, Inc. (Irvine) to reflect the firm's expanded business.

"We have expanded our scope of business services to encompass analytical-through-formulation support for the pharmaceutical, biotechnology and medical device industries," explains Irvine founder and president Assad Kazeminy, PhD. "Irvine now requires a corporate identity more reflective of our comprehensive development capabilities, scientific insight and dedicated service."

Founded in 1988 as an independent cGMP contract testing lab, Irvine evolved into a leading pharmaceutical development organization. Currently occupying more than 42,000 square feet of cGMP-compliant laboratory space, the organization has plans to purchase an additional facility. Irvine's clients include many of the nation's leading pharmaceutical and medical device firms as well as emerging biopharma companies whose leadership relies on Irvine's strict regulatory compliance, high quality systems and innovative approach to project management to meet their development demands.

"We extended our core competencies because we understand the challenges our clients face as they coordinate integral outsourcing projects under immense time-to-market pressure. It is our hope to streamline this process and minimize the non-value-added constraints created when projects are moved from one supplier to another," says Kazeminy.

Irvine will offer expanded disciplinary breadth and increased capacity to bolster its transition into a fully integrated pharmaceutical development company, according to Kazeminy. Services will include method development and validation, analytical quality control, stability storage and testing, comprehensive microbiological support, pre-formulation and formulation, drug delivery testing, inhalation and nasal product testing and biopharmaceutical support.
